Gig workers in search of a code

India's IT industry has the largest base of independent contractors in the world, but they remain outside the purview of labour regulations

Mumbai, 10 March

year ago, a mid-sized company wanted to conduct an analytics exercise on its exhaustive database for some specific information. Instead of taking on a special team of data analysts, the company did the next best thing; it hired a professor of data science from a reputed engineering institute and a team of four engineers for a fixed period. Once the project was completed, the team was dismantled. By hiring gig workers, the company saved 20-25 per cent on the cost of hiring a full-time team to do the job.

Of all the major industries in India, the technology industry is the largest gig employer, with 57 per cent of tech firms actively employing gig workers. According to a Nasscom report, for calendar 2020, gig workers comprise more than 5 per cent of the total headcount in 48 per cent of tech firms, and more than 30 per cent in nine per cent of the firms.

The Economic Survey 2020-21 states that India has emerged as one of the world's largest flexi-staffing markets owing to the fast growth in the e-commerce and online retailing industry. For the very first time, Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman in the Budget 2021-22 mentioned gig and platform workers and the need to provide them with social security. She also mentioned that a portal will be created to collect information on gig, building and construction workers.

This was also the first time the FM proposed to include the Code on Social Security that made provisions for the universalisation of social security for the entire workforce, including gig and platform workers. A key proposal of the code is the creation of a social security fund, which is to be 1 per cent of the total turnover of the aggregator. So far, only preliminary discussions have been held on the subject.

Currently, there are no minimum wages or health benefit packages or pension in case the person has been regularly contributing to a company's growth. Add to this the fact that there are no internal grievance redressal mechanisms if a conflict arises.

According to a study by the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of outcomes, and India (Assocham), India's gig economy is expected to grow at a CAGR of 17 per cent to touch $4 billion in three years. Assocham also stated that India has 15 million freelancers in white collar industries such as IT and programming, finance, HR and design.

Facebook launches Instagram Lite in lower bandwidth countries

STEVEN SCHEER

10 March

Facebook said on Wednesday it was launching a "lite" version of Instagram in 170 countries that will enable people with poor internet to access the photo and video sharing social networking service.

Instagram Lite will be available for Android-based phones and require less bandwidth than the traditional version.

The app itself requires just 2 megabytes (MB) — versus 30 MB for Instagram — and runs even on slower 2G networks, allowing customers in parts of India, Africa, Asia and Latin America with older internet infrastructure to access the service.

"These are the markets where there is the greatest need," said Tzach Hadar, director of product management at Facebook in Tel Aviv, where the app was largely developed.

"It uses a lot less data so if you have a small data package you are not going to run out when you use the service. But the aim is for us to give the same breadth of experience you get on Instagram,"

he told Reuters

Hadar. Facebook's R&D in Israel, said 170 countries did not represent a full global launch, but "it's a step on the way.

He noted that other than TV and reels — for creating and sharing short video clips Instagram Lite retained most key features of Instagram.

A lite version of Facebook itself has been available globally for five years.

In addition to the lite versions, Facebook in Tel Aviv also developed the Express WiFi service to bring internet access to some 20 countries in Africa, Asia, and South America.

Hadar said his team was now working on a digital wallet for Facebook, "You have close to 2 billion people that have no access or limited access to banks and financial services and there are tens of billions of dollars being spent just for fees for migrants wanting to send money back to their families," he said.

Another initiative, he said, was Facebook Shops for small businesses to sell products

Read India's tea leaves in bonds, not stocks

Only two-fifths of the sovereign notes put up for sale have been bought by investors. The rest of the auctions were partially cancelled or devolved on primary dealers

ANDY MUKHERJEE

Consumers are feeling cheated at the gas station. Investors are returning empty-handed from government bond auctions. The Indian state is struggling to make its fiscal math work without shortchanging the first group or disappointing the second.

Each of these discontents could curtail a still-unfinished recovery from the massive Covid-19 disruption. But you wouldn't see any of those concerns reflected in the stock market, which is floating on $85 billion of liquidity pumped into the banking system in less than two years. At the height of the optimism surrounding the 2014 election that brought Narendra Modi to power, the benchmark Nifty 50 index peaked at a price-to-earnings ratio of 23. The multiple is currently at 36 and climbing higher.

The liquidity magic isn't working on bond markets, though. Steepening US long-term yields, an offshoot of vaccine optimism and hardening inflation expectations, are setting the stage for a selloff in emerging-market debt. In India. the story is different. The entire vield curve has moved higher. This isn't a sign of optimism about growth, but a worry about rising oil prices and the hard-to-square arithmetic of next fiscal year's targeted budget deficit of 6.8 per cent of gross domestic product, on top of an expected 9.5 per cent shortfall in the current year that ends on March 31.

Since the government announced those figures, only twofifths of the sovereign notes put up for sale have been bought by investors. The rest of the auctions were partially cancelled or devolved on primary dealers.

Investor anxiety has a lot to do with gasoline and the strain it's putting on stretched household budgets. Monday's price of ₹97.6 a litre in Mumbai ($5 per gallon) was 65 per cent higher than in New York.

Between 2012 and 2014, when crude oil was hovering near the $100 level. the average price gap between the two cities was 30 per cent.

The discontent caused by that surge was masterfully utilised by PM Modi's campaign, which blamed the previous government's policies for causing people to suffer. But after he came to power as prime minister, his administration didn't pass on the subsequent decline in international crude prices to consumers. It kept most of the windfall and spent it. Six years ago, fuel taxes made up less than 10 per cent of the Indian government's revenue. Now, they account for almost 20 per cent.

More than half of what customers pay goes into the kitties of federal and state authorities. Had petroleum products been put under India's 2017 goods and services tax at the top rate of 28 per cent, the burden on the common man today would have been no more than ₹75 for a litre from an average imported crude oil cost of $60 a barrel, according to State Bank of India economist Soumya Kanti Ghosh. Households could have used the savings to increase discretionary spending.

State governments, which were surrendering most of their local levies for a share of the nationwide tax on consumption, didn't want to lose all leverage over their revenue. So petroleum products were kept out of the GST. But the new system didn't live up to its billing, leading to a 1 per cent of GDP revenue shortfall — an unacknowledged fiscal crisis — between April 2018 and March 2019.

Then came the pandemic, which created a whole new fault line of vulnerability. It runs from consumers who are finding gasoline, diesel and cooking-gas prices unbearable to the government that can't afford to cut its high fuel taxes — lest the bond market is spooked further. Sitting on this fractured ground is a state-dominated banking system that has yet to account for most of its pandemic-related stress. When it eventually does, a less-than-healthy consumer economy and small-and-midsize firms propped up by emergency state guaranteed loans could lead to a fresh wave of loan losses. A 2.4 per cent decline in private consumption last quarter "and reports of rising urban utility-bill defaults and social security withdrawals point towards stress among retail customers," according to Fitch Ratings, which estimates a hole of anywhere between $15 billion and $58 billion in governmentcontrolled banks' capital base under varying degrees of loan losses. That dwarfs the $5.5 billion of new capital New Delhi has promised them. A bigger Band-Aid for banks will mean even unhappier debt investors.

Amid the celebratory noises coming from liquidity-fuelled equity markets, it's worth remembering that Covid-19 hasn't gone away yet. After almost normalising in February, economic activity is once again almost 5 percentage points below the prepandemic usual. according to the latest Nomura India Business Resumption Index. Consumer sentiment is improving but only a narrow elite is in a mood to splurge. Just 5 per cent of Indians believe that now is a good time to buy consumer

durables, according to Mahesh Vyas at the Centre for Monitoring Indian Economy.

This sobering reality is finding an expression in the apprehensions of global debt investors. They have pulled out more than $14 billion from India in the past 12 months even as the local equity market has witnessed $29 billion of net inflows from overseas. The latter may get more attention, but what buoyant stock prices are serving up as optimism about resurgent corporate earnings is weak, watery tea. For more reliable signals, it's the bond market leaves that are worth reading.
